Subject: English (Kumarbharati) — Chapter 1.2: An Encounter of a Special Kind

Q1 — Extract 1

- (a)(i). medical professional
- (a)(ii). the boundary wall of our garden
- (b)(i). Any two of: green grass, colourful flowers, tall and majestic trees, seasonal vegetables in the kitchen gardens.
- (b)(ii). The group of langurs had made their den in an aswatha tree nearby.
- (b)(iii). engrossed

Q2 — Extract 2

- (a)(i). True
- (a)(ii). False — the mother langur and other langurs were scattered on nearby roofs, watching helplessly; she did not immediately grab the baby.
- (b)(i). He recalled that according to a terrible custom in the animal clan, a dominant male usually does not allow another male baby or adult to survive within its group.
- (b)(ii). He gathered a stout stick in one hand and hurled a piece of stone at the marauding langur.
- (b)(iii). hurled

Q3 — Write in your own words

- (a). The narrator ignored the barking of dogs at first because he thought the pack of dogs might have simply cornered a hapless pig, so he did not think it was anything unusual or serious.
- (b). The mother langur made no effort to immediately grab her baby from the coop because she was watching quietly from the kitchen roof, seemingly convinced that no harm was being done to her child by the narrator, who was in fact helping the baby.

Q4 — Match the following (Any 6)

- . (a)-(v) to be a part and parcel of = to be an essential or integral part; (b)-(viii) to be engrossed in = to be completely occupied in; (c)-(i) to take notice of = to observe and give attention; (d)-(ii) to figure out = to be able to solve a problem; (e)-(iv) to ponder over = to think about seriously; (f)-(vi) to be overwhelmed by = to be affected emotionally in a powerful way; (g)-(vii) in a flash = very quickly; (h)-(iii) to find a solace = to find comfort and peace.

Q5 — Sequential order

- . 1. I heard the disturbance approaching closer. 2. I saw something horrible. 3. I gathered a stout stick and started throwing stones. 4. I managed to catch hold of the baby langur's tail. 5. I took the baby langur to the backyard. 6. I offered him a peeled banana.

Q6 — Answer in 5-6 lines (Any 1)

- (a). Sample approach: I would gently approach the injured bird without frightening it further, and check the extent of its injury. I would carefully pick it up (perhaps using a soft cloth) and keep it in a safe, quiet place, away from predators. I would offer it water and small amounts of food if possible, and inform an adult, teacher, or a nearby animal rescue organisation. If the injury seemed serious, I would seek help from a vet or a wildlife rescue centre rather than trying to treat it myself.
- (b). Sample approach: The narrator comes across as a compassionate, alert, and courageous person. Despite being young, he did not hesitate to intervene to save the baby langur's life, showing bravery. His careful first aid to the injured baby and his patience in allowing the mother langur to reunite with her baby show sensitivity and understanding. The incident also reveals him to be thoughtful and reflective, as he draws a lasting lesson about trust and communication between humans and animals, which he still remembers vividly after fifty-five years.

Q7 — Do as directed (Any 3)

- (a). Correction: 'My grandparents lay down for an afternoon nap.' (The past tense of 'lie down' is 'lay down', not 'laid down' — 'laid' is the past tense of 'lay', a different verb.)
- (b). Past Perfect Tense: 'I had taken the baby langur to our backyard.'
- (c). Simple Present Tense: 'The mother langur looks straight into my eyes.'
- (d). Simple Future Tense: 'She will survey the area for the vicious male langur.'
